I just don't know how to connect with the network. There's not a lot of documentation for it and I found it hard to find anything to help me. I'm extremely new to iOS, so please stick to simple syntax. Please help! A: There is currently no GUI "Network Library" for iOS so you'll have to use SystemConfiguration or whatever framework Apple provides for that. Unfortunately, the Apple documentation on this is pretty bad. You'll probably need the NSURLConnection class. Setting up the HTTP request is pretty easy. You just create a NSMutableURLRequest, add whatever headers and cookies you want to be sent to the server, add a connection with that, then call open. The most interesting part of the implementation of NSURLConnection is the delegate methods, not the connection's life cycle. This is a simple wrapper for NSURLConnection that lets you start the request immediately, without having to go through the lower layers. Most of the delegate methods either create the NSURLRequest or tell you if it failed. This isn't perfect, for example if you want to check the response or error codes with a block, it doesn't give you the right connection. But if you start the request once, you can just tell the delegate to read the response / error code when it returns, and you don't have to mess with the networking layers anymore. [networkRequest setDelegate:self]; [networkRequest setHTTPShouldHandleCookies:NO]; [networkRequest setTimeoutInterval:60*5]; [networkRequest setHTTPMethod:@"POST"]; NSString *body = @""; NSString *params = [body stringByAddingPercentEscapes
